A local time needs a zone rule The synthetic scheduling note stores an event’s instant and its named time zone. A displayed local wall time alone can be ambiguous during a daylight-saving transition, and some local times do not occur at all. A fixed offset does not describe every future rule of a named zone. The application asks for a disambiguation when creating a time in an overlap. It preserves the intended zone for future calendar display.